Re THE CREAMERY

Many of our readers are undoubtedly anxious to know just what the proposed program is this year, in regard to the Creamery Co., the following letter received by the President of the Board of Trade, gives much information:
Mr. R. M. Henderson, Empress, Alta.
I have your letter of Jan. 22nd . . .

I note that Mr. McGehee has done very little on the well yet. Undoubtedly, however, he will stay with it until it is finished, and we have not much to worry about so long as his outfit is on the ground. . . .

I note what you have to say in regard to money being tight. Undoubtedly that is the case, but I think that the feeling in general will be better when spring comes. You know we have a faculty of forgetting our troubles in this country just as soon as the sun begins to shine in the spring. I will be up there some time in March. We are going to build four factories this year, and we expect to open our buying station in Empress in early spring, so that the producers of cream can start bringing in cream some months before the creamery itself is ready for operation. This will help a good deal.

Yours very truly,
The Saskatchewan Creamery Co. of Moose Jaw Ltd., J. A. Coulter, Manager.

What of the price of flax? Last year selling as high as $7 per bushel, it is now below the $1.50 mark. The excessive cost of threshing, even with the most abundant returns must make flax a very unprofitable crop at the present market price. Yet in spite of this low price, the claim is made that flax can, and is being brought from Siberia and India, to destination at a lower figure than if purchased from the home market. Last year and the previous year farmers were publicly urged to grow flax by private and other interests. If the report re Siberian or Russian flax be true, and we have reason to believe it is, will steps be taken, and of what nature, to protect the home interest?

The Annual Banquet

The annual banquet opened on Tuesday, in very spring like weather. In spite of the fact that this year the event is at most of a local nature good interest is aroused. The Walker rink of Scottie are here to defend trophies they were successful in capturing last year; other visitors are Dawdy, of Leader, and Gilham, of Cavendish.

Season for Trapping

Beaver is Closed

"It has been brought to my attention, owing to the fact that the schedule of taxes adopted by order in Council, wherein a tax is required to be paid on all pelts of animals taken in the Province of Alberta and exported, that owing to the fact that Beaver is mentioned among the pelts on which the tax is collectable that an impression has gained ground that the season has opened for trapping Beaver.

I will be pleased if you will inform all persons with whom you come in contact, and who may be interested in trapping or buying of pelts of wild animals that there is no open season for trapping Beaver, that only where these animals are doing damage on the lands of the applicant can they be taken and then only under permit from this Department.

I am, Sir,
your obedient servant,
Benj. Lawton, Chief Game Guardian.

Hatfield, "The Rainmaker"

(From "Wide World" Magazine)

The December issue of the Wide World Magazine, contains the following interesting account of C. M. Hatfield, "the rainmaker" written by Howard C. Edgley.

"Out in California lives a very remarkable man, known far and wide as 'Hatfield, the Rainmaker.' He claims to be able to cause rain to fall, and for many years has been successfully fulfilling contracts, for the supply of rain to cities and farmers. Hatfield is a mystery to the scientists. This interesting article describes some of his experiences as a drought breaker.

"With a record of forty-two contracts successfully filled in seventeen years, Charles M.
Hatfield, of Los Angeles, California, claims the unique profession in the world. Has come to be known half way around the globe, and has recently been invited to visit England, Australia and South Africa, for the purpose of demonstrating that he really possesses the secret of inducing the sky to weep.

"Hatfield has conducted most of his rainmaking demonstrations in the Western part of the United States, chiefly in California and Oregon, where many notable successes are credited to him; in spite of seoffers who claim that he is nothing but a pious fraud. He first attracted notice by making it wege with Los Angeles business men in 1901, that he could break a drought from which Southern California was suffering at that time. Hurriedly getting together the necessary chemicals, Hatfield went up into the foothills in the Sierra Madre range, and within sixty hours a downpour amounting 8.64 inches had fallen.

"On the strength of this record, Los Angeles business men offered him a thousand dollars to break a long dry spell the following winter. It was agreed that he should deliver eighteen inches of moisture between December and May. The normal rainfall during that period was usually ten inches. Long before the time limit was reached the rainmaker collected his money on a total of 19.52 inches of rain and general satisfaction prevailed as the result of bumper crops.

"Hatfield has had some exceedingly remarkable experiences in the past fifteen years.
Once he contracted with a Southern Californian city to receive fifteen hundred dollars if a certain amount of moisture fell within fifteen days from a given date. He slipped his contract to the city and undertook to unload on a Saturday afternoon—the first day of his allotted time. A freight crew which was doing the switching refused to snot the car for him, so the unloading was postponed until Monday. On Sunday afternoon a drizzling rain began to fall, and continued for about thirty-six hours, yielding more than Hatfield had bound to deliver. His contract read:
"If— inches of rain fall within fifteen days the Chamber of Commerce agrees to pay Hatfield, the Rainmaker, fifteen hundred dollars, so he was enabled to collect the money without unmasking his apparatus, but he didn't do it.

Another time, down in the sugar beet country, round Chino, California. There was a serious drought, and the Chambers of Commerce of several cities in the locality sent for Hatfield to come and tell them what he could do in the way of inducing moisture to fall. The rainmaker went post-haste, and upon his arrival at Chino, found a big delegation of ranchers assembled to hear his remarks upon the subject of rain. With a wealth of facts and figures, backed up by convincing arguments, he launched into the subject, but he hadn't been talking more than twenty minutes when the matter of rain drops was heard on the pavement outside. A heavy rain set in and the farmers went home, many of them soaking

Hatfield, "the Rainmaker" wet, but all of them happy over the prospect of a bountiful crop of beets.

"One of Hatfield's most extraordinary experiences occurred at San Diego, where the city council virtually agreed to pay him ten thousand dollars if he could produce rain enough to fill Morena reservoir, a gigantic natural basin in the mountains, about sixty miles from the city, whose population obtains its supply of fresh water for domestic purposes. If the city could get the reservoir filled at that price, it would be getting its water for about one hundredth of a cent per gallon, so it looked like a good bargain.

This was the winter of 1916. The city gave Hatfield one year in which to fill the reservoir. In thirty-three hours after he began operations 9.80 inches of fall in the vicinity of the reservoir, and during the month of January alone, thirty inches of moisture fell. It was estimated that four thousand million gallons of water went into the reservoir during that period the cash value of which at ten cents per thousand gallons, would have been four hundred thousand dollars. The city admitted that a five year supply of water had been impounded. In a single day 15,330 inches of rain fell and during the twenty-six days Hatfield worked 41.1 inches of moisture descended in the vicinity of his test station.

Finally four and a half feet of flood water was passing over the spillway of the reservoir. Then things began to happen. Heavy rains in the country had so swollen the streams that a flood occurred during which more than a hundred and ten city and county bridges were washed away, and the Santa Fe railroad was so badly storm lashed that it was put out of commission for many days. The Otay dam, another reservoir belonging to the city of San Diego, burst one night, and caused an inundation in which as many as a dozen people were drowned and hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property destroyed.

"When the time for settlement came, the authorities flinched. They declared that Hatfield had no written contract, and that furthermore it could not prove that he was responsible for the rain which had fallen. He never collected that ten thousand dollars. The version of the affair is that, as city council thought that it could better stand a lawsuit brought by him than appear to assume responsibility for causing the floods and be forced to pay big damages for loss of life and destruction of property.

"In March 1912, ranchers and business men at Helena, California, offered the rainmaker four thousand dollars to hook a long dry spell in the Helena Valley. In eleven months only two inches of rain had fallen. Now Helena, as a rule, is always about 2.34 inches short to the average yearly rainfall at Los Angeles. The day Hatfield went to work on this contract Los Angeles claimed twice the rainfall that Helena had enjoyed up to that date, and yet at the end of the rainy season, Helena's record stood at 11.79 inches, while the rain gauge of Los Angeles only registered 11.45 inches.

"Eleven years ago he was called to Wasco, in Sherman county, Oregon, where he contracted to deliver six inches of moisture in a rainfall of sixty square miles, for the benefit of the grain and stock ranchers. That amount of rain fell within six weeks, and this was the Portland Oregonian had to say concerning the incident:

"This is Hatfield's second season in Sherman county. According to records 25 of an inch has been Wasco's greatest precipitation in May for twenty-five years. Up to May 20th, this year Hatfield says he has secured 22 of an inch. In giving this figure 15 claims to have come from the rainfall of the month when the contract began.

"One year at Crow's Landing, California, the farmers offered Hatfield two hundred and fifty dollars for nine inches of rain during the season, agreeing to pay fifty dollars for eleven inches and one thousand five hundred dollars for twelve inches. The normal rainfall in that district is about five inches. When eleven inches of rain had fallen the streams were tanking at water, and the fields were wet. The farmers could not wait to plant their crops. They therefore called a raise meeting, paid the rainmaker one thousand five hundred dollars and ordered him to discontinue his operations. "Commenting on his work the New York (California) newspaper once had this to say:

"Though the official gauge at Crow's Landing shows but a few inches of rain for the season, the Newman Company's record here is ten points lower. Hatfield has earned a bonus of three thousand dollars, at his own gauge up to the hills, the third of the trio upon which payment depends—said to show over nine tenths of an inch, making a total of thirty-six inches for the three gauges, an average of 12 inches. The accuracy of Hatfield's gauge is not disputed, as other private gauges in that vicinity agree with it.

"At Lake Spaulding, near Emigrant Gap, Oregon, Hatfield was paid two hundred dollars for a few hours of drought when cattle were dying by the thousands and miners were shut down for want of water. He collected the money within a week after beginning work. "Farmers and business men at Merced, in Stanislaus county, California, hired him for eight consecutive years. Ranchers signed up more than a hundred thousand acres of productive land to guarantee the expense. Prior to that time they only had one satisfactory crop in three years.

"In June, 1906, this remarkable man was called to Dawson City, Alaska, by a big mining concern, to produce enough precipitation to make possible what is termed the "June Cleanup." For six years they had not averaged more than 25 of an inch of rain there during the month of June. The rainmaker set up an outfit near Nome, and operated for the benefit of the Dominion Creek, Gold Creek and Hunker Creek water sheds, and for six consecutive days his rainfall averaged 1.18 of an inch.

"Hatfield's methods are mysterious, to say the least. He erects high steel towers—either two or four—on the highest point in the district, and near a pond, lake, or other body of water. He guards his secret jealously, but admits that he induces rain to fall by assisting Nature in the formation of vapor-laden clouds. On top of his high towers he places scores of shallow galvanized iron pans, which contain various chemicals, from which he says he is able to create an atmospheric condition that results in precipitation.

"The man and his methods are a complete mystery to scientific meteorologist. Most of the Government weather experts laugh at his experiments, and deny that he has anything to do with the showers which appear to follow his operations in a most uncanny fashion. The sceptics claim that the showers just happen—yet the rain seems to pursue him around the country quite regularly, commencing from twenty-four to sixty hours after he erects his towers, despite the fact that the country in which he is operating has usually been under dry for months. Hatfield has offered to give his secret to the United States Government in return for official acknowledgment of his ability to induce moisture to fall from the skies, but up to date his offers are not accepted, and he is still a curiosity to scores of scientific men who have endeavored to ascertain his methods.

"Hatfield is an unassuming Quaker, and resides at Eagle Rock, California. He was born near Dodge City, Kansas, just forty years ago, and spent his boyhood in Minneapolis, where he received a common school education. He says he has acquired his knowledge regarding that production of rain by artificial methods from a study of library books, coupled with practical tests of his own theories.

The meeting of February 8, of the Junior C.G.T. club was held at the home of Elsie Hay. During the business meeting it was decided that no girl should be allowed to join the club, unless she belonged to the "Lend-a-Hand" or the "Christian Endeavor" Sunday School classes. This rule was made at the first meeting and has since been kept. After the business meeting a short program was given by the members of the club.

The meeting of February 15, will be held at the home of Gladys Hayes. Each girl will bring her sewing or fancy work. After the business meeting, Miss Rivers will give a talk on the work of the C.G.T. club. At the meeting of January 31, this rule was learned.
